

Jasmine Langevine

Jasmine is a consultant in the People and Change practice of KPMG's Advisory sector. Her primary responsibilities include delivering human capital management solutions to clients and working closely with Advisory leaders on research and business development activities.

Before joining KPMG, Jasmine worked with PDI Ninth House and Turknett Leadership Group, leadership development, executive coaching and human resource consulting firms as well as in a myriad of internships on the east coast. She also independently practices career counseling with undergraduates, graduate students and working professionals helping with interview preparation, resume review and career opportunities. In the community, Jasmine teaches at the annual Learning Summit for InRoads, Inc. and Agnes Scott College's Senior Transitions Program. She is a member of the Board Director's Network, Society for Human Resource Management and Womenetics Inc.

A native of Stone Mountain, Georgia, Jasmine graduated from Agnes Scott College in 2007 with a BA in Economics and Organizational Psychology and obtained a Master's Degree in Social-Organizational Psychology from Columbia University in New York in May 2010.
